Extract from a private letter dated September 6th, ight miles beaw Dogwood Cap, on New River : " On the 2), we marched from Dogwood Camp with parts of three pieces and two regiments, leaving two guns and a garrison at Dogwood. During the day, we occupies the "Hawk's Nest," and to k possession of Willer's Ferry. The en my was camped beyond Big Creek. Having discovered one of his camps unguarded, Lieuterant-Colonel Anderson was start d through the mountains to surprise them at day break. About sunset, we pushed on in front tril da kness overtook us, and unfortunately a little too far. At the bridge, over Mc-Grom's threek, a strong detachment ambuscaded our advance, consisting of the B time sharp-shooters, Captain Somers, Third R gement of Wise Legion. The General imself was on the bridge, and called on his men to charge, which they aid with the atmost gallantry, at once aispersing the enemy. We had only three would dless than I expected, as the enemy fired from enly forty paces. A tree near where General Wise s ood was struck by several balls. We camped there, and next morning at day-break advanced on the enemy at Big Creek. The object was to amuse him till Anderson should attack. It appears by the sequel that Anderson eached the desired point at day-break, but found the camp of the preceding evening removed-the enemy in strong entrenession cuts, and much reinforced. Not hearng anything of Anderson, but finding the enemy on this side of his entranchments, the company of Captain Somers and two offers of the Third Regiment were ordered to ascend the bul-side through the wood. This they did in gallant style, with a cheer, driving more than double their number before them into their entrenchments, opposite to which they remained at a lew yards from the enemy, most of the day until recalled .-On our right a howitzer was advanced, which soon shelled the enemy out of his position, he answering inoff ctually with a rifle cannon. Herr ng that Anderson was returning, (and our only object having be n to keep the enemy in play till be had an opportunity to attack,) about four in the afternoon we fell back, having, with 800 men, off red battle to the enemy, numbering 2,000, particulars of affairs in Western Virginia, with special and strongly entrenched.
